JULIA WARD HOWE.

Novel Ship Propulsion.

A resident of Stettin, Germany, has invented a unique scheme of ship propulsion, which he has had patented in the United States. This propelling mechanism for ships is by means of wind motors, doing away entirely with steam or electricity. The wind motors are arranged in pairs on each side of the ships, and transmit power to the propeller by suitable shafts and gearing. For the purpose of greater development of power two of the motors are coupled together upon one shaft. By arranging the motors on both sides of the ship and connecting to two-propellers facilitates access and the transference of power. If one of the motors gets out of order the second motor still remains operative.—Washington Star.

An Unstable Laboring Class.

The prospector of the mountains and the cowboy of the plains are each a sort of Bedouin, with no permanent abiding place—here to-day, there to-morrow—usually with a long story of experiences in different places—going to Alaska and coming back, rushing to new mining camps, trying new ranches, but always moving. Indeed, the laboring class of the West, as a whole, is as unstable as water, with the very microbe of travel in its blood. I talked with a carpenter in Tacoma, a man of family, too, who had worked in every important city on the Pacific Coast, and was then planning to go to Butte City, where he had heard that wages were specially high.—From Ray Standard Baker's "The Western Spirit of Restlessness," in the Century.

The Japanese were acquainted with iron from very early times. A sword that was used by one of the ancestors of the present Emperor, about 800 B. C., is still in existence.

Five Things About Minneapolis.

Everybody is supposed to know about Minneapolis, but at least five things I did not know—that the residence portions are simply New England over again—elms and all; that a frowsy and even dirty hotel without electric lights in its bedrooms, which could give no breakfast to a traveler leaving it before 7 o'clock, could set so good a table; that a city could contain so large a proportion of magnificent boarding-houses, those here having once been the residences of men who lost fortunes in the over-speculation in grain and its products some ten years ago; that so prominent a paper as the Journal is printed in simplified spelling; and that the University of Minnesota has the finest campus I had ever seen in a city.—Henry Holt, in Putnam's and The Reader.

She Married a Chinaman.

One of the leading figures in the Chinese colony of San Francisco is an American woman who married a Chinaman. She is a sister of Katherine Clemons, who married Howard Gould, who is suing her for a divorce. Her name now is Mrs. Sun Yue, and she apparently has affiliated herself thoroughly with the people of her husband's race. Among these she is doing much benevolent and religious work. She has converted to the Catholic faith her husband, whom she once nursed through a severe illness, and she has also made many similar conversions among the other Chinese in San Francisco. Her influence among the Celestials is very great. Mrs. Sun Yue has been living with her husband in a camp on an eminence overlooking San Francisco's old Chinatown.
